We are an independent non-profit think and do tank*. We design and implement public innovations that strengthen democracies by fostering better institutions, inclusion, gender equality, and participation. Our activities take place in 19 countries in Latin America and the Global South, where we work with civil society organizations, universities, movements, activists, governments and multilateral organizations.

Gathering revolution

The pandemic’s consequences are still with us. Latin America is poorer, more unequal, more violent and less democratic than it was a decade ago. Worst of all, we seem to be caught in a perfect storm: an unprecedented crisis of institutional legitimacy; an economic system that creates the super-rich while at the same time pushes people out of the system; and social networks and media that encourage individualism and confrontation.

We need a revolution. A revolution where we resist the impulse to divide and rebuild bridges to work, debate, share and play together again. Reunification will allow us to design common horizons once more, forging meaning for all the people of the region.

This is the main mission we have proposed for ourselves at Asuntos del Sur. Today our efforts are focused on the reconstruction of the democracy social network, especially in two areas: we work at the intersection where governments and citizens gather, crafting strategies for collaboration; and we seek the protection and inclusion of vulnerable communities and segments of the population. Through our advocacy projects we specifically aim to contribute to collaborative governance mechanisms; to work with governments and institutions to implement methodologies and technologies of collective intelligence; to create consortiums to share experiences of democratic practices; and to create networks and alliances.

I want to point out that we use similar strategies within our organization. This year we developed a new internal work protocol - in accordance with ILO directives to continue having healthy, respectful and inclusive working environments within the team - and we deepened our strategies to care for the organization’s employees and strengthen gender parity and diversity. At the same time, we have been setting up our "Casa Sur," a work and meeting space to be launched at the beginning of next year.

2022 has been a year of great growth for the issues we cover, our team and networks, and the territorial impact of Asuntos del Sur. Without a doubt, none of this would have been possible without: the enormous effort and commitment of our staff; the support and guidance of our Executive Board and our Strategic Board; and, especially, the trust of the institutions, governments, and collectives that convoke, collaborate and support us.

I thank every one of you for giving us this vision in Asuntos del Sur, and I invite you to come even closer this coming year, as we continue our efforts to dream and design strategies to build democracies that guarantee rights for all.

Who We Are

Asuntos del Sur is defined by the people who comprise it, which is why in 2022 we continued to strengthen our team through our policy of academic, geographic and identity diversity. We note the change of authorities in our Directive Board, and also point to an increase in young and diverse talent thanks to our agreements with the Universidad Nacional de San Martín and the Universidad Siglo 21, from which more than 20 students joined our team. Likewise, we continued our agreement with Contratá Trans.
